Kentucky Transitions

*Making your choices
our first priority.*

What does Kentucky Transitions mean to me?

Many people living in facilities think that they don't have the ability to move back into the community. People miss their old homes, or yearn to be a part of the social community again. Kentucky Transitions makes it possible for elderly, disabled, those with mental retardation or acquired brain injuries to make a transition back living in the community. The goal of Kentucky Transitions is for people to understand their choices and participate in choosing where they live and how they receive their services.

How does Kentucky Transitions work?

A local regional transition team assists each participant in developing every detail of a transition plan, including medical, housing, social, and personal care needs. Kentucky Transitions works with various state and community agencies to provide all necessary supports. Transition services can include housing location

Who will help after the transition?

When the participant moves into their community home, the regional transition team will be available to help the participant with any needs that may arise. The goal of Kentucky Transitions is to provide the supports the participant needs to make a successful move into the community.
